She has been in ill health for some months in her home in Maryland, and hopes to recuperate in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Watkins, in Westchester County, N. Y., where she will remain until early in October. Gen. and Mrs. Wright took advantage of the good weather to look at some available houses. Mrs. Wright expects to go to Long Island tomorrow, accompanied by the Secretary, who will spend the week-end with his family.

Mr. Wu Chao-chu, son of the Minister from China, is expected to spend the end of the season in Atlantic City, with his wife and little son. Atlantic City has a just claim upon young Wu, as he spent several years there in school and finally carried off the highest honors in the high school, at his graduation in the class of '04, after his parents had returned to China. His old friends are looking forward with great pleasure to the visit of himself and family.

WARRENTON'S HORSE SHOW

Arrangements Made to Hold Tenth Annual Event on September 2.

Entries for Forty-two Classes, and Several Thousand Dollars Offered in Prizes.

Special to The Washington Herald.

Warrenton, Va., Aug. 21.—The arrangements for the tenth annual horse show at Warrenton, Va., Wednesday and Thursday, September 2 and 3, have been completed. The show this year is believed by the officials to exceed all previous exhibitions in performances and attendance. The Warrenton show is the best open air show in the State and considered by many to have no superior in the South.

Besides the royal gathering of horse flesh, the grounds are absolutely perfect—no dust to mar the pleasure of visitors—all is a perfect sward. Surrounding the show ring and promenade is a row of young trees that contribute to the beauty of the grounds and comfort to the thousands that witness the show from the side lines. On the right of the ring is the grand stand to seat 5,000, including half of the ring, and along the front of this stand are white boxes, where visitors from New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, and other cities assemble on this occasion.

On the north side the ground rises sufficiently to afford a magnificent view of the ring and grand stand. Here, during the show, hundreds of carriages of the country gentry assemble, and beyond this gathering, about 30 yards, can be seen a long row of show-white stallions, reaching the entire length of the grounds, with 200 box stalls in perfect condition.

There are forty-two classes and several thousand dollars in prizes. All of these classes are well filled, and in the most prominent ones are entries from Washington, New York, Boston, Baltimore, Richmond, Norfolk, and other cities.

The most attractive class is a special for green hunters that have never won a blue ribbon, in which Mr. J. R. Murrill, of New York City, offers a handsome silver cup to the winner.

Mr. C. Mullikin, president of the Virginia Horse Show Association, has created considerable interest by his offer of a beautiful silver cup to the horse having won the greatest number of blue ribbons in the State this season, and the rivalry among horsemen is very prominent, there being but two other shows following this—Petersburg and Richmond.

At a rule there are between 8,000 and 10,000 people at this show each day, but this year preparations are being made to entertain a larger gathering.

Jackson Grove Assembly. One more week will witness the closing of the Jackson Grove Assembly, which has been in progress since July 12. The Interstate Summer Bible School, which opened on Monday last, will continue through next week, with daily addresses by Dr. E. D. Bailey, of Brooklyn; Rev. Thomas B. Ironside, of Morristown, N. J., and others.

To-morrow, it is expected, will be the greatest day of all at Jackson Grove. James H. Atkinson, president of the United States Praying Band, of Baltimore, assisted by members of the band, will conduct the 24th of July prayer and praise service. At 11 o'clock Rev. N. Thomas B. Ironside, of Morristown, N. J., will preach. At 2 o'clock Mr. Bennett, of Baltimore, will conduct a song service. At 2:30 o'clock Mr. Olive B. Hickman, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and Miss Anna E. Garland will speak to the young people. At 3:15 o'clock Rev. J. B. Clayton, of Washington, will preach on "The Bible, the very word of God." A number of soloists will sing gospel hymns.

Alexandrians in Protest.

A committee representing the citizens of Alexandria and vicinity, who have business in this city, visited Commissioner West yesterday and registered a protest against the erection of the proposed substitution in the southwest at Fourteenth and Water streets. The principal objection is that the site is inconvenient to the street car lines.

When you have lost or found anything, telephone an advertisement to The Washington Herald, and bill will be sent you at 1 cent a word.

ASSAIL OIL VERDICT

Federal Lawyers Aver Judges Ignored Evidence.

SAY COMPANY WAS PROTECTED

Petition for a Rerearing Filed by Attorney General Assents That Points in Overruling Opinion Will Destroy the Work of Years if Upheld—Injustice to Landis.

Chicago, Aug. 21.—The trust busters counted heavily on the courts to-day when the government filed its petition for a rehearing by the United States Court of Appeals of the case against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. It was in this case that the Standard Oil Company was originally fined $25,000, which decision was reversed and a new trial ordered by the Court of Appeals.

Judge Grosscup, writing the opinion of reversal, criticized Judge Landis of the trial court very severely. Judge Grosscup got it all back to-day with interest with the government filed its petition for a rehearing by the United States Court of Appeals of the case against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. It was in this case that the Standard Oil Company was originally fined $25,000, which decision was reversed and a new trial ordered by the Court of Appeals.

Points Brought Out. Although the form of legal courtesy was perfectly preserved, the Appellate Court was declared:

To have ignored the evidence presented by the government.

To have favored the decision of Judge Landis.

To have reversed the ruling of its own presiding judge in a former case, in order to favor the oil company.

To have read into the record matter favoring the Standard Oil Company.

To have rendered unjustly by its decision the rights of the oil company and the interests of the public.

To-day's appeal for a rehearing of the $25,000 case is the direct expression of the Federal administration. The petition is the joint production of Attorney General Harbo, of Frank B. Kellogg, the Minnesota trust buster, who was made a special assistant to the Attorney General, and is also signed by Edwin W. Sims, United States district attorney at Chicago, and his special assistant, James H. Wilkerson, both of whom presented the government's case of the case in the original trial.

Success Impossible. It is authoritatively stated that if the interpretation of the law given by Judge Grosscup, Seaman, and Baker is allowed to stand, successful prosecution of rebate cases against corporations will be impossible in the future. The lawyers signing the government's petition for a rehearing, who took part in the recent conference at Lenox, Mass., are a unit in declaring that the reforms in rebate matters brought about by the Roosevelt administration would represent so much out and then settle with me. Make way for the body."

He brought the hansom to the curb. The strikers held back.

"Yes, let the lady out," called their leader.

"Get out at once!" ordered the chauffeur through the trapdoor, for the girl had made no move to descend. Her face was blanched, but her frightened eyes were fixed upon a bloody dash on the chauffeur's head, which she could see through the trap, and not on the surly mob around them. The chauffeur had forgotten his high, peculiar voice. His tones were deep and full. She recognized Careflood even in the uniform of the chauffeur.

"Get out, I implore you!" he begged. "I can't hold those villains back any longer. You will be safe, and I can escape," he added, reading protest in her eyes.

"Do you think I will leave you in danger?" she cried, reproachfully. Joy flashed in his eyes.

"If you are safe, I can take care of myself. Get out at once, I insist," he urged.

"Why don't she get out?" yelled the impatient crowd. "Nobody wants to hurt her."

"If she don't hurry herself we won't wait," threatened a growling voice. "Ethel's temper flared up. She leaned forward, her eyes blazing at the scowling faces about her."

"How dare you!" she cried. "How dare you attack a woman?"

Her judgment scorn of them produced a sensation. Some of the men slunk away; some laughed; others remonstrated. "Nobody wants to hurt you," Careflood's alarmed tones through the trap besought her to be silent.

"I dare not leave this seat to help you," he said, "they would smash the hansom to atoms."

Poised had struggled with the mob which Careflood's harangue and Ethel's unexpected denunciation had restrained for the moment. At this instant a voice dashed the hansom through it. So unexpected was his move that unconsciously the crowd made way for him. Bruised and bleeding, he rushed the hansom toward its destination. Don't strikers and police were left far behind.

The trap opened, and an anxious, appealing face peered up at the chauffeur.

"Just a few scratches that a day or so will heal," came the cheerful reply.

"Are you very angry with me?" resumed the appealing voice below the trap.

"How could I be angry with the dearest, bravest girl in the world?" said the voice above it.

"Why did you come to America? And—"

"And run this hansom," he finished for her with a laugh. "I came to see you. I was robbed of everything on leaving the ship. Detectives are looking up my belongings, and I expect a cable of money too late for banking hours to-day. I am too proud to ask a loan, so I thought I'd put to use the only trade I know and earn a night's lodging for myself."

"Oh, but think what might have happened," protested Ethel, tearfully. She held out her purse diffidently. "Won't you take it?" she begged.

Careflood helped her out at her door. "I'm coming to call to-night," he informed her. "The court plaster won't show."

"I'm just dying for a talk," she assured him. Then she glanced about her very carefully. His look was tender.

"It won't do," he explained, "to be seen kissing the chauffeur."

Ethel blushed.

"Wish me good luck," she told her friend, the bride, for a faint day, "for I am going to marry Lord Maxwell Careflood, of Clevedon Towers."

(Copyright, 1908, by E. C. Parrella.)

wasted time unless the upper court is convinced that it is in error in its construction of the law.

The petition, therefore, resists the order for a retrial of the case made by the Appellate Court. It declares that the government is thoroughly satisfied with the presentation of law and fact made in the original trial before Judge Landis, and holds in so many words that the Appellate Court has erred in its construction of the law. It asks the right to reargue before the Appellate Court. The Appellate Court is asked to apply to the Supreme Court of the United States for an authoritative construction of the points of law involved, and to reconsider its reading of the decision of the lower court as to the facts cited in the evidence.

Alleged Vital Error. According to the petition, the government considers that the Appellate Court's ruling that the Standard Oil Company did not know it was paying an illegal rate is the vital error. In the strongest language possible—language which is on the border line of rank disrespect for the superior court—it is pointed out that if, with the evidence introduced at the first trial, it is impossible to prove that the shillings of its own acts, then successful prosecution of similar cases must be regarded as impossible in the future. All the years of legislation designed to correct rebate abuses would have to be repeated.

Other errors—many of them—are found by the petitioners in the ruling of the Appellate Court. Throughout the petition is couched in the plainest possible language, and the technicalities of law are avoided. It is quite evident that this document is intended for the public digestion as well as for the consideration of the court. It is a declaration of the administration that unless Judge Grosscup's construction of the law is reversed, the twenty years of anti-rebate legislation have been wasted.

The reasons assigned by the petitioners for asking a re-argument of the case may be stated in a nutshell as follows:

That the opinion of the Appellate Court erroneously states portions of the record; that it does injustice to Judge Landis, who tried the original case; that it leaves doubtful the rule of law to be applied in the future, both as to the knowledge on the part of the shipper that he is accepting an illegal rate, and as to the number of offenses that may be charged against a shipper whose consignments cover a period; that the Appellate Court is in conflict with the language of the Supreme Court in a similar case, and that it has even reversed the action of Judge Grosscup, the presiding judge of the Appellate Court, in a previous case identical as to facts, and that the great weight of legal authority is against the position assumed by the Appellate Court; and that the position assumed by the Appellate Court, if permitted to remain unmodified, will tend to encourage disobedience to law, to impede the enforcement of salutary statutes, and largely to defeat their purpose.

Following the vigorous attack upon the interpretation of the law by the Appellate Court, attention is called to the fact that "the statute creating this court provides that the court may at any time certify to the Supreme Court of the United States any proposition of law concerning which it desires the construction of that court for its proper decision." Judge Grosscup is asked to go to the Supreme Court before the reargument of the case and secure from this final authority an authoritative interpretation of the legal points involved. This is declared to be "only fair and right, in the interest of justice."

Homes Are in Danger. "The white man's home is in the greatest danger. Our white men cannot get labor to maintain their homes. The Japs have crowded so hard, they have caused distress on every hand. I myself feel as though I would like to move to some land where there are no Japs."

"I should be glad to write more on this liberty destroying evil that has invaded our land and is crushing to earth all that is sacred and pure, but I know your time is valuable."

"If I am eligible for membership in the National Anti-Asiatic Immigration League please put me down. I was born in Milwaukee, April 18, 1887. My father was a volunteer from Wisconsin in the civil war and lost his life in battle."

"What can I do to push the good cause along?"

Hoping to hear from you soon.

Richard, Cal.

F. W. TUCKER.

GIRLS, BE HONEST.

The old adage is wise: "If you cannot speak well of a man, speak not of him at all." That is the guide-post to kind thinking.

But if you cannot think kindly of a person, and cannot keep silent, by all that's honest take out your little hammer and "knock" openly, saying, "I'll gladly take it back if anybody can show me that I'm wrong, but this is what I think."

That is the brave, manly way. Why not the grave, womanly way, too? Why should we be too cowardly to stand for our opinions?

Most girls tell their "knock" with an imitation charity, and some are so shy that they can make their sugar-coated bitter criticisms pass for real sweetness of character.

John says to Amy about Sue: "She's a nice girl, isn't she?"

"Yes—yes," replies Amy, reluctantly, after a pretended struggle.

"What makes you say it like that?" asks, straightforward John. "Don't you think she is nice?"

"Oh, yes. She's nice," answers Amy, in a troubled tone that makes the decided man say to himself: "Poor little Amy! So sweet she just can't say anything unkind about anybody. I wonder what Sue does that isn't nice?"

And sweet little Amy has slandered Sue more viciously than if she had spoken words of blackness about her—and has basely protected herself. She has "said" nothing and feels holy—the little hypocrite!

But Amy is always found out, sooner or later. All men are not fools. Some day she will meet the clear-sighted, right-minded fellow who will say to her the polite equivalent of "put up or shut up."

And young man, here is a tip for you: When you hear a girl begin a critical speech with the words, "I hate to speak ill of another girl," trust her not, she's fooling thee.

If she hutes to speak ill she wouldn't do it, unless in some circumstances, for the right's sake, she had to. And then she'd do it frankly; and if she was sorry you'd know it by many signs.

Sometimes a sweet girl, who believes herself honest and wants to be honest, will wrap a compliment deftly about the keen blade of malice.

"I think she is just lovely!" she will say, enthusiastically. "She is a splendid girl! Of course, I couldn't do some things quite as she does; but then all of us are not alike, and some people look at some things differently."

That girl has her claws pulled back into the fur, but they are sharp. Look out for them!
